

Abstract

Background:

Open defecation (OD) is the act of disposing human feces in open spaces and is a known risk factor for transmission of pathogens through environmental pollution, hence causing fecal oral diseases. Approximately 419 million people globally are practicing OD and 5.6 million people in Kenya. The study investigated the influence of socioeconomic factors on open defecation and fecal oral diseases.